

The Inglewood Oil Field

Chances are that you have driven by the Inglewood Oil Field for years and wondered about the field and the activities that occur there. The intent of this newsletter is to update you on just that – to describe our current operations, plans for the coming year, and to invite you to get to know the men and women who produce oil from Los Angeles Basin’s largest operating oil field.

What is the Inglewood Oil Field?

The Inglewood Oil Field is approximately 880 acres in the Baldwin Hills, producing oil and gas to meet California's energy needs. The field began operating in 1924 and is still producing to this day. Nearly 80 men and women are employed full-time at the field. They work alongside another 100 to 150 contractors who support our operations.

Current Operations

The Inglewood Oil Field is the largest of the Los Angeles Basin's producing fields. More than 430 wells are in production bringing forth approximately 5,200 barrels of oil per day. Our current operations consist of routine well and facility maintenance as well as ongoing well abandonment. There is no hydraulic fracturing or "fracking" on the Inglewood Oil Field.

There is no drilling/re-drilling taking place currently and no such activities planned for the remainder of the year. In fact, no new wells have been drilled on the Inglewood Oil Field since 2014.

Plans for 2020

There are no plans to drill/re-drill wells in 2020. However, each year we provide a list of likely well candidates should conditions change during the course of the year. Re-working some existing wells to maintain production is scheduled throughout the year along with other repair and maintenance activities. Currently, no major work is planned for tankage or other supporting facilities. Twelve wells are slated for plugging and abandonment in 2020.

2019 Milestones

The entirety of the Landscaping Master Plan effort completed in December 2018 and in 2019 Sentinel Peak Resources planted 50,000 square feet of land not mandated by the Landscaping Plan on the north side of Stocker Street before La Brea. Routine maintenance of these areas will be ongoing.

The Inglewood Oil Field also hosted its first paid job training program this year. After several interviews, two locals were selected to work for three months full-time learning about the oil field, safety and operations. The program is planned to continue in 2020.
